(SAN FRANCISCO, CA) February 5, 2008 -- Arizona Bay, a leading venture capital and application development firm, announced today it made a significant investment in online verification company, TrustMe. TrustMe.com joins Arizona Bay's portfolio of innovative companies that, through Arizona Bay resources, can rapidly develop and deploy its' platform.

TrustMe.com provides a simple and effective way to validate the identity of an individual online. In addition to providing users options for identity verification, the company provides a credible and anonymous platform to interact from. Users are able to communicate with strangers online from this platform without divulging personal information until he or she deems necessary. The company's commitment is to give customers a safe harbor from fraud and scams when interacting online. As the ecommerce industry continues to evolve new and innovative strategies must be introduced to stay ahead of the curve. For users who wish to meet off-line, as is common in today's online classifieds, TrustMe.com allows users to share a photo and voice clip of themselves with others to help them gain trust and reduce the face-to-face interaction risks from meeting offline. The company's focus is on simplicity and user functionality because interacting online safely shouldn't be hard.

"Identifying the true identity of an individual operating online is very difficult, if not impossible, which brings a high level of anxiety and discomfort to ecommerce transactions, especially big ecommerce transactions, said David Graham, managing partner of Arizona Bay. "By identifying the individuals involved in an interaction, inherent risks are significantly reduced and the comfort level of any given transaction is greatly increased."
